

A group of consumers filed a lawsuit against ClearView Corporation after using its new line of home appliances led to multiple incidents of electrical fires. The plaintiffs alleged that the appliances were defectively designed and failed to meet safety standards. ClearView Corporation defended itself by arguing that the appliances met all regulatory requirements and that the fires were caused by improper use. The court had to determine whether the appliances had inherent design flaws or if the incidents were due to user error.